

Internal Mobility Policy

Contents

Introduction	2
Benefits of Internal Mobility	3
Key Information	4
Communication & Transparency	4
Support	4
Career Development	4
Guidelines	4
Promotions	5
Organization change	5
Location change	5
Job change	5
Contract change	5
Roles in the Internal Mobility Process	6
Employee	6
Current Manager	7
HR Business Partner	8
Recruiter	9
Hiring Manager	10

Introduction

As organizations navigate the complexities of talent acquisition and retention, internal mobility has become a key strategy for building a resilient and adaptable workforce. In an industry where agility is essential, having a structured and documented internal mobility approach is crucial for fostering a dynamic and engaged employee base.

At RealPage, we are proud to have a global team of talented employees who collaborate to support our customers and drive business growth. To sustain this momentum and help employees achieve their career goals, we actively promote and support internal mobility, which is the internal transfer of an employee into a different role and/or location within the company and includes both vertical and lateral movement. Leveraging the talent already within our organization allows employees to advance, reskill, and explore new growth opportunities, fostering a more diverse workforce at all levels.

Together, we can ensure both company-wide success and personal career development.

This document outlines RealPage's approach to internal mobility, including guiding principles and recommended steps for all stakeholders to follow.

Benefits of Internal Mobility

The benefits of internal mobility extend far beyond simply filling vacant positions, positively impacting not only individual employees but also team dynamics, organizational culture and the bottom line. Below are key advantages that make internal mobility a cornerstone of successful talent management strategies.

Drives Employee Engagement

A demonstrated investment in employee growth and development significantly boosts employee engagement. When organizations prioritize internal mobility, employees feel valued and motivated, seeing clear pathways for both upward and lateral career progression within the company. This sense of possibility and personal growth keeps employees intellectually stimulated, leading to higher levels of engagement and productivity.

Retains Top Talent

Research shows that 70% of employees would explore opportunities within their current organization before looking externally. By developing job skills within our organization and providing opportunities for mobility, we can achieve higher retention rates and reduce employee turnover.

Fosters Inclusion and Diversity

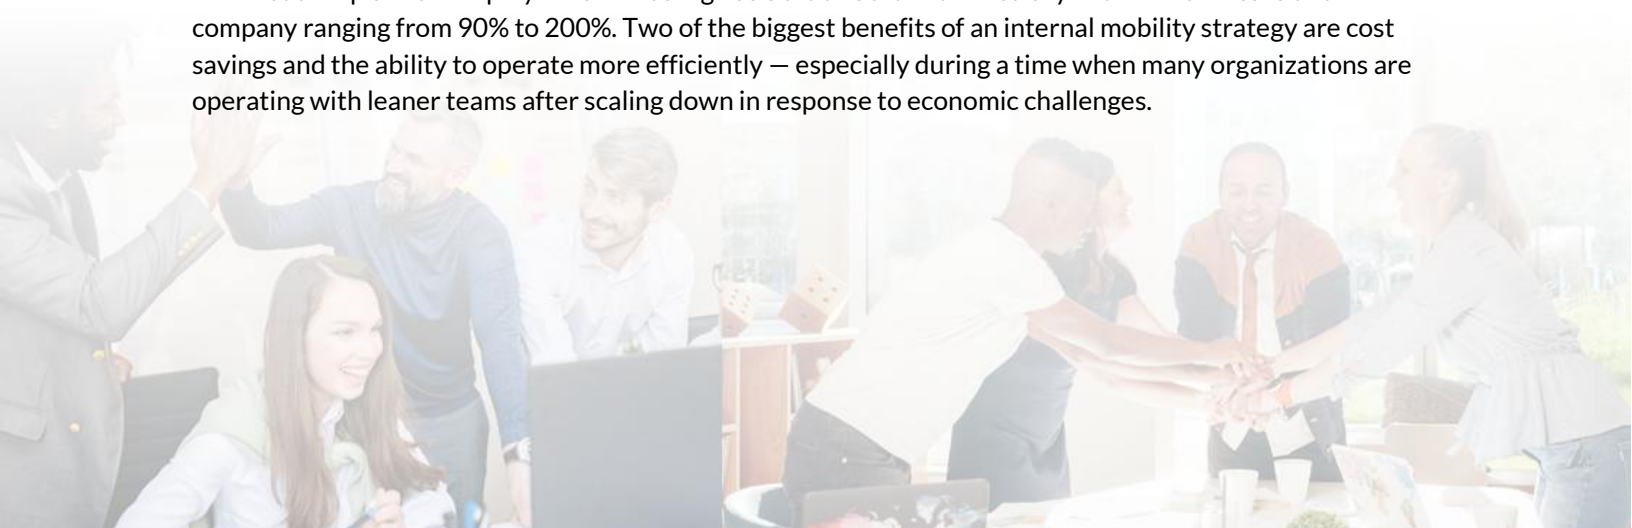

Internal mobility fosters inclusion and diversity by providing employees from all backgrounds the opportunity to advance, reskill, and explore new roles within the organization. This approach ensures that a wide range of perspectives, experiences and skills are represented across various levels, contributing to a more inclusive and equitable workforce.

Boosts Productivity

On average, it takes 28 weeks for a new employee to reach full productivity in a mid-level role. Internal mobility allows us to easily identify our existing employees, who already know our business and are ready to grow their careers.

Saves Time and Money

The cost to replace an employee can be as high as 50% to 60% of their salary with overall losses to the company ranging from 90% to 200%. Two of the biggest benefits of an internal mobility strategy are cost savings and the ability to operate more efficiently — especially during a time when many organizations are operating with leaner teams after scaling down in response to economic challenges.

Key Information

Communication & Transparency

Current employees who are interested in exploring an internal job opportunity are encouraged to communicate this interest to their manager. It's important to note that expressing interest in an internal job opportunity is not asking for permission – employees already have permission to explore any roles that they are interested in at RealPage.

If a particular internal opportunity is not a fit, employees should not be discouraged. This will not reflect negatively on the employee or prevent them from future opportunities. Managers and HR are committed to working together with employees from all backgrounds and experiences so they can be successful in their career journeys.

If hiring managers are interested in an employee for a job opening, they must contact the employee's current manager directly, before reaching out to the employee. HR Business Partners (HRBP) should also be involved to help facilitate this process and support the internal opportunity discussions.

Support

Managers are responsible for creating an environment where employees feel comfortable exploring internal career opportunities without fear of repercussions. If there is a disconnect between the employee and their manager, the HR Business Partner can provide support, ensuring all employees have equal opportunities to advance their careers and that concerns are addressed promptly and fairly.

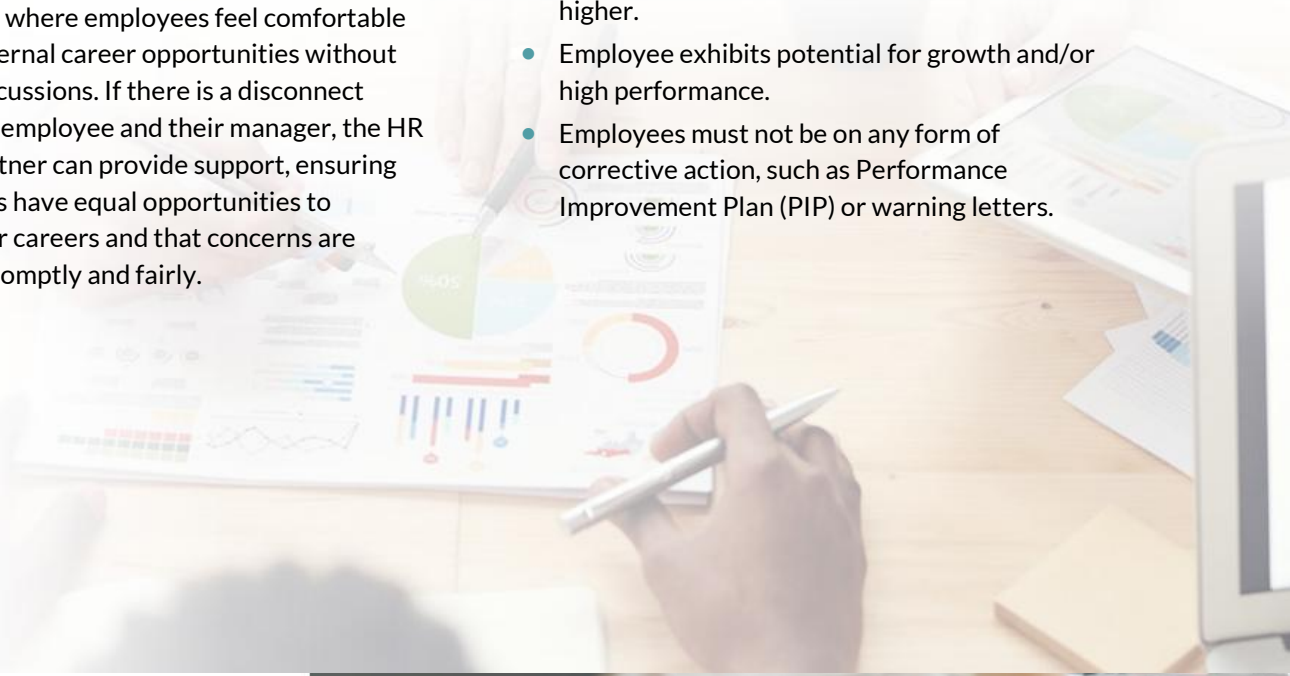

Career Development

RealPage encourages and supports our employees who seek to develop their skills and grow their careers. People managers are expected to have career conversations frequently (i.e., at least twice per year) with their employees to understand career aspirations and to assist in creating development opportunities.

An employee's desire to change roles or move internally should not be viewed negatively. Managers should share an honest assessment of the individual's performance with the appropriate hiring manager who is considering the employee for the role. The assessment should be aligned with the feedback provided to the individual during the previous performance review. Collaboration between people managers, employees, and HR is essential and benefits everyone involved.

Guidelines

- Employee must be tenured at RealPage for at least one year.
- Employee has been in their current role for at least one year, but this may vary depending on the business need and the responsibilities associated with the role.
- Employee is rated as meets expectations or higher.
- Employee exhibits potential for growth and/or high performance.
- Employees must not be on any form of corrective action, such as Performance Improvement Plan (PIP) or warning letters.

Definitions

RealPage supports internal mobility – the internal transfer of an employee into a different role and/or location within the company. The following definitions are intended to clarify role changes that are considered internal mobility.

Promotions

- From individual contributor to senior professional (increase in job scope).
- From individual contributor to managerial level.
- From junior managerial position to senior managerial position.

Organization change

Moving between departments.

Location change

Moving from one company location to another.

Job change

Lateral change between departments, or job change in the same department.

Contract change

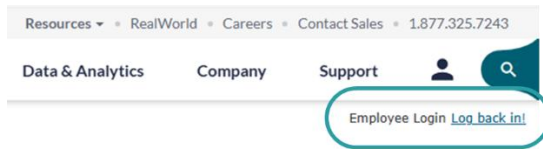

Intern/temporary to permanent; contractor to employee.

Note: Job grade changes are determined by the specific role an employee is transitioning into, rather than solely by their years of experience.

Roles in the Internal Mobility Process

Employee

- Self-reflect on your career goals. Ask HR for Development resources to facilitate your career planning.
- Discuss your areas of interests with your current manager. You do not need to wait for a specific opportunity to open a conversation with the managers and colleagues in the areas you are interested in.
- Research available opportunities by navigating to our Employee Internal Career Portal:
 - <https://employees-realpagepms.icims.com/>
 - In the top right corner, click Employee Login and login (using your RealPage Single-Sign On (SSO))

- Tip: Chrome browser is preferred
- When you identify an opportunity that you are interested in or you wish to pursue, you are required to inform your current manager as a courtesy. This communication is not a request for permission, as all employees at RealPage have the autonomy to explore any internal roles in which they are interested. If you need assistance preparing for this conversation, HR is available to support you.
- Involve a RealPage recruiter for support during the interview process or your HRBP for additional assistance.
- If selected for the role, work with your current manager on developing a transition plan and share your ideas on potential internal successors for the role you are leaving vacant.
- Consult with both your current and hiring manager before communicating any organizational changes.

Current Manager

- Respond to your employee's interest in another role with a "One RealPage" mindset. Remember: RealPage actively supports employees' career development and will provide them with career opportunities to help them achieve their goals while enabling RealPage to retain top talent.
- Understand the internal mobility process and align with your HRBP for support throughout the process.
- Ensure your management team and functional leader are aware of any internal talent movement.
- Provide accurate, balanced feedback on performance and potential.

If an internal candidate is selected:

Ensure all goals/notes are updated in the HRIS system prior to the transition.

- Discuss and align on the transition period with the hiring manager. Do not put the employee in the middle of this discussion.
- Create a transition plan, in alignment with the employee, that enables success for the entire team.
- Once the current employee has accepted a new role, begin working on the plan to best utilize the headcount for the role being vacated.

If an internal candidate is not selected:

- Confirm that the employee's current role is secured for them and reaffirm your commitment to their professional development.
- Facilitate frequent professional development conversations with the employee.
- Ensure the employee understands that internal opportunities are encouraged by supporting a development plan based on career aspirations and aligning them to current and future roles.

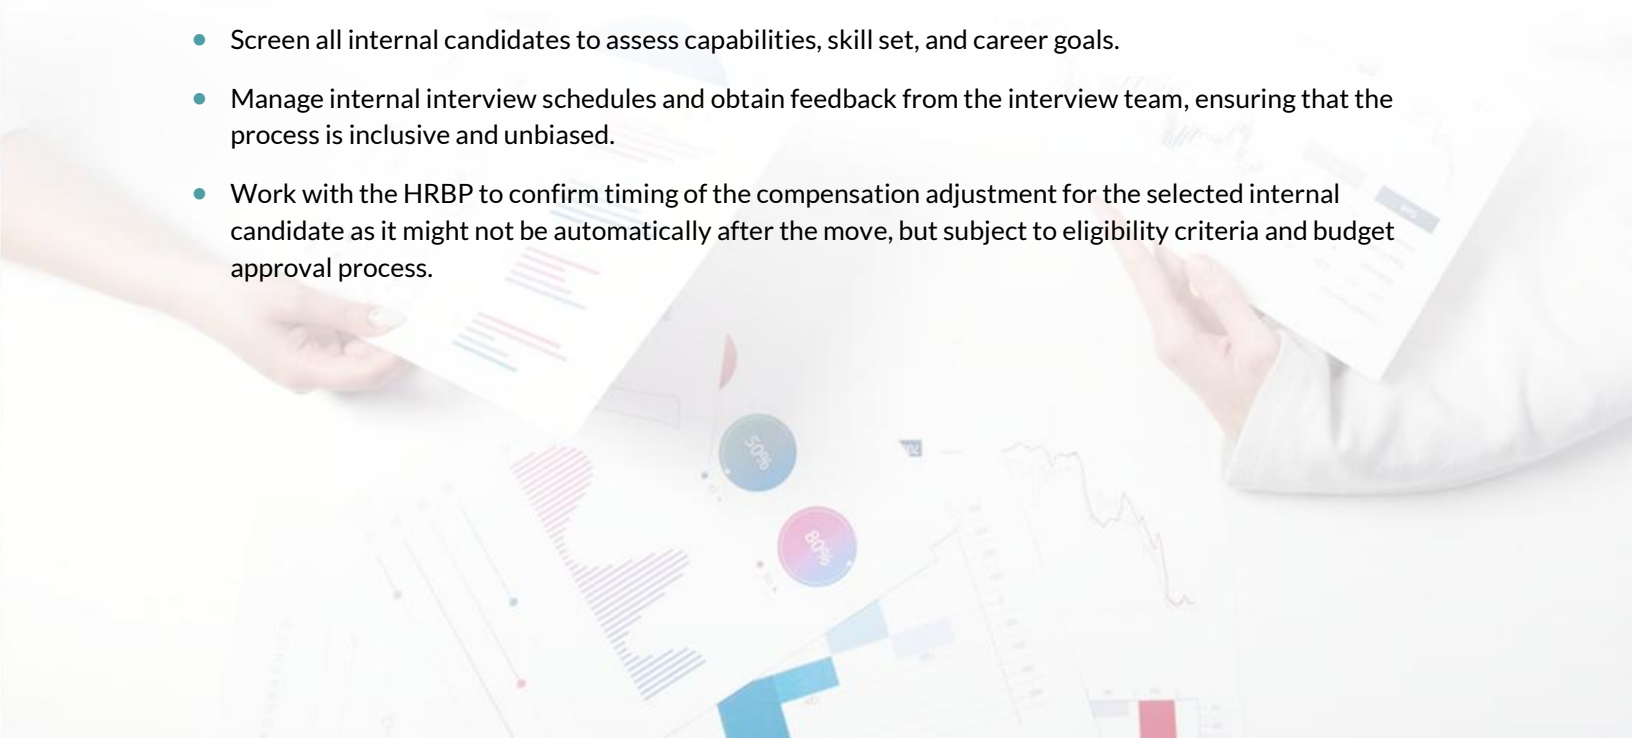

HR Business Partner

- Be a proactive career advocate.
- Provide advisory support to the employee and manager throughout the process.
- Ensure that all parties are acting with a “One RealPage” mindset and in full support of enabling internal career mobility for RealPagers.
- Ensure performance feedback is reviewed and considered.
- Provide compensation recommendations, if applicable.
- Support organizational transition plans and collaborate with functional and regional HRBPs as needed. Transition time should be consistent with the employee’s contractual notice period, if any, unless otherwise agreed between the employee, current, and hiring managers. Please note: Contractual notice periods can vary by country.

Recruiter

- With the knowledge of the HRBPs and managers, proactively seek internal candidates for open positions.
- Make internal candidate sourcing and recruiting the priority in generating candidate pools for open positions.
- Ensure the employee has informed their current manager when they express interest in a role.
- Notify the HRBP of internal candidates.
- Work with the hiring manager to define a fair and inclusive selection process.
- Provide support for the employee and management teams throughout the process. If there is any indication of resistance to the “One RealPage” mindset, or for enabling internal mobility, inform the HRBP.
- Stay closely aligned with the HRBP, hiring and current managers throughout the process.
- Screen all internal candidates to assess capabilities, skill set, and career goals.
- Manage internal interview schedules and obtain feedback from the interview team, ensuring that the process is inclusive and unbiased.
- Work with the HRBP to confirm timing of the compensation adjustment for the selected internal candidate as it might not be automatically after the move, but subject to eligibility criteria and budget approval process.

Hiring Manager

- Involve the employee's current manager before approaching an employee on another team within the organization.
- Seek feedback on performance and potential from multiple sources before making a decision.

If internal candidate is selected:

- Work with your recruiter to confirm the job level, title and compensation before discussing these topics with the employee.
- Negotiate the transition period with the current manager. Transition time should be consistent with the employee's contractual notice period, if any, unless otherwise agreed between the employee, current, and hiring managers. Please note: Contractual notice periods can vary by country. If you have any questions or need further clarification, please consult your HRBP.

If internal candidate is not selected:

- Provide transparent feedback on why the internal candidate was not selected and any suggestions on what they can work on to improve their chance of success next time.
- If appropriate, provide feedback to the current manager on possible development opportunities to help support the employee's career growth.

We look forward to nurturing and developing our internal talent and fostering a culture where every employee has the opportunity to grow, thrive and achieve their full potential while delivering our business goals. For any questions, please contact the HR Team.

Document Control

Month / Year	Author	Changes
October 2024	HR	Document created and published
July 2025	HR	Update on system (Recruit IQ)